Clinicians often suspect speech difficulties in young children under 36 months with limited expressive abilities but they find it challenging to provide intervention when children don't have the attention or skills to participate in structured therapy activities. This full day workshop for speech-language pathologists will present a developmentally appropriate model for providing assessment, identification and intervention for this young group of children

In this full day workshop participants will learn about:

- Identification and evaluation of young children with suspected speech sound disorders
- A developmentally appropriate parent/caregiver – child intervention program that is based on current best practice and research principles.
- Training and coaching parents/caregivers to be the primary implementors of intervention
